Lucky to Be Alive: Violent Confrontation Escalates During Theft Call

Alicia Fleming

Shreveport Police are actively searching for a woman who is lucky to be alive after a violent, reckless confrontation with officers on March 22 at 1125 Shreveport-Barksdale Highway.

This began as a theft at Walmart. It quickly turned into a dangerous assault.

As officers attempted to detain her in the parking lot, Alicia Lewis, also known as Alicia Fleming, refused to comply with repeated commands to exit her vehicle. Instead of surrendering, she chose to escalate.

She slammed a car door on an officer's head.

She then put the vehicle in reverse, trapping that officer in the doorway.

She used the vehicle as a weapon.

She then threw the car into drive and fled the scene.

This was not just resisting. This was a deliberate, violent act that could have easily ended in serious injury or death. Situations like this are exactly how deadly force encounters begin.

She made a series of decisions that put an officer's life in immediate danger.

Detectives have secured arrest warrants for multiple charges, including battery on a police officer and resisting an officer with force or violence. Additional charges are expected.

We also want to thank the witness who recorded these events. That footage is critical and helps ensure accountability.

She is believed to be in Bossier City. Anyone who knows her whereabouts is urged to contact the Shreveport Police Department or Caddo Crime Stoppers immediately.

The officer was not seriously injured—but this could have ended very differently.
